

5 New Artistic Talents From the Artnet Gallery Network We're Watching This October

This month, we're watching emerging artists with works on view from Los Angeles to Linz.

Artnet Gallery Network, October 14, 2021

Kristian Touborg, Turning Fluent (Refracted View) T(2021). Courtesy of Carvalho Park.

At the Artnet Gallery Network, our goal is to discover new artists each and every month. We sift through the thousands of talented artists on our site to select a few we find particularly intriguing right now.

This month, we've chosen five artists whose work we think you should know about, available at spaces from Brooklyn to Berlin. Check them out below.

Kristian Touborg
Carvalho Park, Brooklyn

Kristian Touborg, Dawn+Sequence. Courtesy of Carvalho Park.

Copenhagen-based artist Kristian Touborg's work is on view for the first time in the U.S. in "As We Turn Fluent," a two-person show in Brooklyn featuring fellow Danish artist Tove Storch and curated by Henriette Noermark. The exhibition explores ideas of fluency in architectural terms—balancing of forces and effects. Here, Touborg's textile works poetically present spaces of suspended movement and tension; collaged from fragments of recycled fabrics, reflective industrial textiles, and swatches of digitally printed canvas hand-sewn together, the artist's expressive textiles sometimes feature details from previous works, snippets of art-historical imagery, or architectural photographs taken by the artist while walking around his neighborhood. They are richly layered and draw the eye to them again and again.