Copenhagen-based artists Kristian Touborg and Tove Storch have combined their sculptural and painting practices in a duo show on view through October 23 at Carvalho Park in New York, curated by Henriette Noermark. It's all about surface tension and suspended movements in this show – Storch's sculptural works consist of silk fabric sheets laid across a framework of steel legs, anchored by small magnets, while Touborg (above) uses oil and dye to create moody hues on stretched canvases featuring fragments of recycled fabrics, reflective industrial textiles, and swatches of digitally printed canvas, collaged together.
