SATURDAY SELECTS

Week of June 22, 2020

by Monica Khemsurov

A weekly Saturday recap to share with you our favorite links, discoveries, exhibitions, and more from the past seven days. This week: two group design exhibitions with a charitable component, two new tubular lighting releases, two artisanal building materials making us wish we owned a home, and one yin-yang showroom interior (above) that we can hardly believe is for a paint company.

On view now, by appointment, at Carvalho Park gallery in Brooklyn is an exhibition of works by two artists, Paris-based Guillaume Linard Osorio and Denver-based Derrick Velasquez. We actually really like the striated paintings of Osorio, which almost appear to be lenticular, but we chose to share Velasquez's more object-like wall sculptures, made from strips of industrial vinyl. See all of the works here.
